

Eve of the Emperor Penguin

Mary Pope Osborne

**Download PDF / ePub / DOC / audiobook / ebooks*

DOWNLOAD

+

READ ONLINE

#23901 in Books Random House Books for Young Readers 2009-12-08 2009-12-08Original language:EnglishPDF # 1 7.63 x .32 x 5.191, .49 #File Name: 0375837345144 pagesRandom House Books for Young Readers | File size: 62.Mb

Mary Pope Osborne : Eve of the Emperor Penguin before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Eve of the Emperor Penguin:

2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. My 6 year old first grader son is in love with these booksBy LucyMy 6 year old first grader son is in love with these books. He reads a book in about 2 days. I couldn't believe how interested he was in reading. Perfect adventure books for kids!0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Very fun and meaningfulBy BrYanHighly recommended for imagination and good values. We love them...don't pass it up if you're a parent. Magic, magic, magic0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy Nanny to 3as expected

The #1 bestselling chapter book series of all time celebrates 25 years with new covers and a new, easy-to-use numbering system! Jack and Annie arrive on the one continent they haven't visited before: Antarctica! What can they hope to learn about happiness in such a barren place? Only the penguins know for sure! Jack and Annie are about to find out! Formerly numbered as Magic Tree House #40, the title of this book is now Magic Tree House Merlin Mission #12: Eve of the Emperor Penguin. Did you know that there's a Magic Tree House book for every kid? Magic Tree House: Adventures with Jack and Annie, perfect for readers who are just beginning chapter books Merlin Missions: More challenging adventures for the experienced reader Super Edition: A longer and more dangerous adventure Fact Trackers: Nonfiction companions to your favorite Magic Tree House adventures Have more fun with Jack and Annie at MagicTreeHouse.com!

About the Author MARY POPE OSBORNE is the author of the New York Times number one bestselling Magic Tree House series. She and her husband, writer Will Osborne (author of Magic Tree House: The Musical), live in northwestern Connecticut with their three dogs. Ms. Osborne is also the coauthor of the companion Magic Tree House Fact Trackers series with Will, and with her sister, Natalie Pope Boyce. SAL MURDOCCA has illustrated more than 200 children's trade and text books. He is also a librettist for children's opera, a video artist, an avid runner, hiker, and bicyclist, and a teacher of children's illustration at the Parsons School of Design. Sal lives and works in New York with his wife, Nancy. From the Hardcover edition. Excerpt. Reprinted by permission. All rights reserved. CHAPTER SIX, All Fall Down Nancy put away her radio and looked at Jack and Annie. I don't know how you two got past me. Were sorry, said Annie. This is unbelievable! said Nancy. Jack couldn't believe it, either. How did they mess up so badly? I'm so sorry I brought you here, said Nancy. No, no, it's our fault, Jack said again. It's mine, all mine, oh . . . , said Nancy. She seemed near tears. You're just little kids. Not so little! thought Jack again. Gee! A snowmobile rumbled outside, its engine warming up. Oh, dear, said Nancy. I've got to lead the group up a safe route to the crater, or they'll be in trouble. But Pete should be back here in just a few minutes. Will you be okay by yourselves till then? We'll be fine, don't worry, said Annie. Good, said Nancy. Here, sweeties. She poured some water into two cups and gave them to Jack and Annie. Drink. While they drank the water, Nancy spread a blanket on the floor and turned on the small heater. Lie down here, she said. Just rest. She patted the blanket. Jack and Annie lay down. Nancy covered them with another blanket. If you get thirsty, drink more water, she said. Thanks, said Annie. Jack was too embarrassed to say anything. He felt like a preschool kid being put down for a nap. Okay! Nancy said with a big sigh. You kids nearly gave me a heart attack, she repeated half to herself as she left the hut. Sorry, said Jack. But Nancy was gone. Soon the roar and rumble of the snowmobiles filled the air as Nancy led the scientists and journalists up the mountain. We really messed up our mission this time, said Jack, lying under the blanket. And we were doing so well, too, said Annie. She sat up. Can I see Morgan's rhyme, please? Jack pulled the rhyme out of his pocket and handed it to Annie. Okay, said Annie. She read aloud: . . . then all fall down, Till you come to the Cave of the Ancient Crown. I wonder if this counts as falling down? said Annie. She put the rhyme into her pocket. I don't think so, said Jack. I don't know what that means. And there's no Ancient Crown in Antarctica. It's all science and research and rules and helicopters and snowmobiles. . . . It's the real world. . . . His voice trailed off. Well, I know one thing: I don't want to waste time lying around here, said Annie. She threw off the blanket and stood up. At least I can take a few pictures while we wait for Pete. You really feel like doing that? said Jack. Not really, but I'm going to try, said Annie. I don't think you should, said Jack. Don't worry, I'll be back soon, said Annie. Maybe I'll see an ancient crown. Yeah, sure, said Jack. Annie put on her goggles and ski mask and headed outside. Jack reached into his pack and pulled out their book. He took off his glove and looked up ancient crown in the index. He wasn't surprised to find it wasn't there. Jack put the book back in his pack and took out his notebook. He read over his notes: Go slow! Stay with others! Cracks in ice! Never touch wildlife! Jack's hand was cold, so he put his glove back on. He put away his notebook, and then laid his head back down and closed his eyes. He just wanted to sleep. The heat from the small heater felt good. The sound of the snowmobiles was fading into the distance. As he started to fall asleep, his notes ran through his mind: Stay with others! Cracks in the ice! Oh, no! thought Jack. He sat straight up. He tossed off the blanket. He threw on his pack and rushed out of the hut. The wind was blowing the snow into icy clouds. Jack pulled up his ski mask and lowered his goggles. Annie! he shouted. What? Her voice came from the distance. Jack caught sight of her. She was aiming her camera up the slope at the smoking crater of the mountain. You have to come back now! he shouted, walking toward her. You shouldn't be walking around by yourself! Okay, okay. Annie put her camera in her pocket. Come on, said Jack. He took Annie's hand. They held on to each other and walked through the blowing snow, toward the hut. Remember Nancy's rules? said Jack. There are deep cracks in AHHH! Before Jack could finish, the ground beneath him gave way and he and Annie crashed through a thin layer of snow into a deep crack. Jack and Annie landed on a ledge of ice. Clumps of snow fell on top of them. Silence filled the air. A thin shaft of light came from the opening they had fallen through. It was at least ten feet above them. You okay? Jack said. I think so, said Annie. They both sat up slowly. Annie peered over the edge of the ledge. Uh-oh, she said. Look. Jack looked. He and Annie were on the ledge of a ravine that plunged thousands of feet down into darkness. This must be one of those hidden places in the mountain Nancy talked about, said Jack, the ones made by the lava and hot gases. Its incredible, said Annie. She reached into her pocket for her camera. As soon as Annie moved, Jack heard the ice crack. Dont move! he said. Annie froze. Forget pictures, said Jack. Were facing serious danger here. If we move, the ice might break under us and well fall thousands of feet. Got it, said Annie. She took a deep breath. Maybe we should use the wand. We cant, said Jack. The wand wont work. We can only use it for the good of others, not just ourselves. Darn, said Annie. They were both still for moment, listening to the immense silence around them. Okay, said Annie. The way I see it, if we dont use the wand, well be stuck here forever. Soon well make the wrong move and fall. Right, said Jack. So well never find the secret of happiness for Merlin, said Annie. Merlin will fade away completely from sorrow. And Camelot will lose his magic forever. Right, said Jack. So maybe in this case, rescuing ourselves isnt just our good, said Annie. Our good is also the good of others, like Merlin. Good thinking, said Jack. Lets try it. He carefully twisted around and took off his backpack. Then he very slowly reached inside and pulled out the Wand of Dianthus. Okay. Five words . . . , Jack whispered. I guess Ill just wish for it to save you and me and Merlin. Hey, why didnt we make that wish a long time ago? We couldnt, said Annie. We hadnt tried our hardest yet. Right. Get ready . . . , said Jack. He closed his eyes, held up the gleaming silver wand, and said: SAVE ANNIE, MERLIN, AND ME! Jack waited a moment. Then he opened his eyes and looked around. What happened? he said. Nothing, said Annie. So I guess it didnt work, said Jack. He turned to put the wand away. I guess the rules must CRACK! The ice broke! The ledge gave way! AHHH! called Jack and Annie as they fell through the twilight, down through darkness, down, down, down, down into blackness. From AudioFileFans of the Magic Tree House series know that Jack and Annie have been challenged by the magician Merlin to discover the four secrets of happiness. This time their quest takes them to bleak Antarctica. With author Osborne narrating, listeners settle in to enjoy her unique blend of fact and fantasy. Osborne's soothing, beautifully articulated voice and knack for characterization are reliably pleasing. In addition to hearing Jack and Annie's childlike voices, listeners will enjoy meeting their northern guide, scientists, journalists, and even a penguin ("peep"! ). There's something especially sweet about this story, which concludes the children's search for happiness. Its positive message, delivered in Osborne's simple, sincere style, offers much to listeners of all ages. J.C.G. AudioFile 2009, Portland, Maine