Not very accurate By Gustavo Markel The list of topics regarding to Antarctica travel is complete, but each topic is poorly covered and some times with inaccurate information. Especially when it comes to animal life in Antarctica where there's an important a lack of research in these subjects. As an example in the book is written that the Northern Right Whale is extinct, which fortunately is not true. It fails to mention the Galapagos Penguin and confuses it with the Humbolt Penguin. Also states that the emperor Penguin is "the least numerous of all penguins" and that is also not true. Again there are less Galapagos and Humboldt penguins than Emperor penguins, but also there are less Snares, Fiordland, Yellow-eyed and African Penguins. Another big mistake about Southern Right Whales is saying that "they breed around Puerto Piramides near Puerto Madryn, Argentina". I live in Argentina and I can tell that that is a common mistake. Puerto Piramides is a small village where all the whale watching boats depart, they are not allowed to depart from Puerto Madryn by law, but both places are in the same gulf, Golfo Nuevo, and the whales don't make any distinction where to breed in gulf. And they also breed in the northern gulf of Peninsula Valdes, Golfo San Jose (tourist don't go there often) and in many other places including New Zealand and Southern Australia. So the only good reason to read this book is to gather a list of topics and make your own research. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful.
