It is not known exactly when the first map found its way into the collection of the Indiana Historical Society, its acquisition could have taken place as early as 1830, the year that the organization was founded. Over the last 186 years the IHS has continued to add cartographic gems to its collection. The scope of the maps maintained by the IHS ranges from several Old World views of North America to more contemporary views of Indiana counties and towns. While the focus of the map collection is broad geographically, its core subject is Indiana and the documentation of the evolving history of the Hoosier State. Two introductory essays relate the history of mapmaking from the early days of maps in America to the present as well as the history of maps in the state. More than one hundred maps from the IHS collection are highlighted with brief essays on each. Finalist, IBPA Benjamin Franklin Award; finalist (Regional), Foreword INDIES Book of the Year Award
