This wasn't what I expected but it doesn't mean it may not be the right book for you. This isn't a guide for the Blue Ridge Parkway area. It is a more specific list of places to go, stay and see along their suggested itinerary. That means, you can be just down the road from a town with an entry and there is nothing in the book on it. If you are doing more roaming and expect this as a guide we found it lacking.

This guide was very helpful to us. We were able to locate the types of hikes we wanted to take. Even though we just did the NC portion of the parkway, it was a good resource.

About the Author
Though Jason Frye calls the coast of North Carolina home, his heart is with the mountains. Born and raised in the rugged Appalachian foothills in southern West Virginia, he developed an affinity for hiking and exploring the woods, coves, and hollows of the hills. His family vacationed in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, deepening his love for this landscape with each visit.
Jason first encountered the Blue Ridge Parkway on a dark night, en route to the beach, when his family briefly followed this two-lane ribbon of highway across the Virginia mountains. Though the detour onto the Parkway lasted less than an hour, he knew he wanted to explore it further. In his 20s, he followed the Blue Ridge Parkway through Virginia, even continuing onto Skyline Drive for an X-Files-inspired road trip. When he moved to North Carolina, he discovered the beauty of the southern end of this drive. To this day, he takes the Blue Ridge Parkway any time he gets the chance.
Jason is the author of two Moon guidebooks: Moon North Carolina and Moon North Carolina Coast. He also contributes to Salt magazine, AAA Go!, Our State and Our State Eats food blog, the Wilmington Star News, where he is a features contributor and dining critic, the Raleigh News and Observer, the Charlotte Observer, the blog of Virgin Atlantic Airlines, and a number of other print and online publications.

Andrews Bald: Hike to one of the prettiest high-altitude meadows in the Smokies.
Catalooches: Camping in this secluded valley with Milky Way views is bliss and driving through isn't half bad either.
Hen Wallow Falls Trail: An easy out-and-back day hike to a beautiful waterfall.
Cades Cove: Cades Cove offers plenty of wildlife viewing and the largest collection of intact historic structures in the park.
Rick Mountain: Hike up, up, up in the hills for gorgeous views of Cades Cove.

II. Arlington National Cemetery: The second oldest National Cemetery contains the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the gravesite of JFK, and monuments, memorials, and headstones marking major events in our history. Dark Hollow Falls Trail: This short trail leads you to a beautiful 70-foot waterfall just off Skyline Drive.
