Michael Sommers : Moon Living Abroad in Brazil before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Moon Living Abroad in Brazil:

Tourists Going to Brazil By David Jones This is a comprehensive and important volume for anyone planning a trip to Brazil, or for someone who is relocating to that country on a permanent basis. Various sections of the country are discussed in detail, food is focused upon, and Brazil's customs for visitors and future residents are emphasized. Customs in Brazil are unique to that country, and it would be critical for tourists to be aware of potentially negative situations that could arise. Pictures taken by the author illustrate the various topics being written about. I heartily recommend this easy to read and complete volume about this fascinating country. It's a must for travellers!

About the Author Michael Sommers first traveled to Brazil at the age of four. His only memory of Rio de Janeiro is that of being served a glistening orange wedge of papaya in the grand dining room at the Hotel Gloria. Twenty years later, he returned to Brazil, where he was seduced by the intense, colorful landscapes, rich cultures, and warm people. Michael eventually settled down in Salvador, the baroque capital of Bahia, where he has worked as a writer and journalist for over a decade. Born in Texas and raised in Toronto, Michael grew up with travel on the brain the result of time spent in the backseat of Oldsmobiles, Mini Mokes, and Pan Am jets under the influence of his Gourmet-addicted mother and his father's roving zoom lens. When Michael turned 18 he took flight, setting down temporary roots in cities such as Bordeaux, Paris, Montreal, New York, and Lisbon. During this time, he earned a BA in Literature from McGill University and an MA in History and Civilizations from the cole des Hautes tudes en Sciences Sociales, where his thesis was The Image of Brazil and Brazilians in Hollywood Cinema. He also worked as a writer and editor at magazines and newspapers and freelanced for publications such as The New York Times, The International Herald Tribune, and The Globe and Mail. In addition to authoring Moon Brazil and Moon Rio de Janeiro, he blogs about Brazilian travel and culture on Moon.com (Moon.com/blogs/brazil). While he has yet to master the art of preparing feijoada (Brazil's national stew of beans, salted beef, and pork), he does make a mean caipirinha.
